That Lafe Worth Leving?

Le Lafe Worth Leving?

Close of Rev. Dr. Thomas' Memon in Chicago last spanday.

If I have with any degree of accuracy succeeded in setting forth the facts in the case, or have at all rightly discerned the issues that confront our age, it needs no argument to convince any thoughtful mind that these issues are truly momenticus. And the vast interest centres in this: That the character of the doubt and unbellef now coming upon us is such that when fully set in, and really comprehended, it must radically affect men's views upon the questions of morality and the value of ille. This is the burden of Mr. Minlock's book. In the presence of these incoming doubts, he may well sak, "Is Beamember-Friends, Remember, I Mothers!! Mothers!! Mathers!! Mathe lief now coming upon us is such that when fully set in, and really comprehended, it must radically affect men's views upon the questions of morality and the value of life. This is the burden of Mr. Mallock's book. In the presence of these incoming doubts he may well ask, "Is life worth living?" And the substance of his book—save a few of the last pages—is to show that the denial of God, of spirit, of immortality, takes away all the old foundations on which the ages have rested, and leaves morality and life to seek for something new upon which to Mallock's book. In the presence of these incoming doubts, he may well sak, "Is life worth living?" And the substance of his book—save a few of the last pages—is to show that the denial of God, of spirit, of immortality, takes away all the old foundations on which the ages have rested, and leaves morality and life to seek for something new upon which to seek for something new upon which to stand. And he argues, and I think justly, that if the old foundations of God and a lature life are taken away morality has no real basis, and life has no sufficient explanation; no point at which it can assert its value or its end. There is nothing particularly new in Mr. Mallock's arguents; the thinking world has been familiar with such reasonings; but there is a special timeliness and appropriateness in these thoughts now. And they bear with great force upon the materialistic tendencies of our times; they point out the legical result of the material.

And he argues, and I think justify. that if the old foundations of God and a fourne life are taken away morality has no real basis, and life has no sufficient explanation; no point at which it can assert its value or its end. There is nothing particularly new in Mr. Mallock's arguments; the thinking world has been familiar with such reasonings; but there is a special timeliness and appropriateness in these thoughts now. And they bear with great force upon the materialistic tendencies of our times; they point out the logical result of the material philosophy. It is to take away that on which morality and the value of life have all along rested. They have rested upon a belief in God, and in a future world. And the question Mr. Mallock presses upon the whole school of materialists and positives is, What do they propose to give us in the place of these old foundations? With the thought of a living God, morality is made sure in its foundations. It is built upon His eternal justice and goodness. Itis proclaimed in His laws; and the whole of history and life find their highest interpretation in the fact that the world is ruled for righteousness. But take this thought away, and what is left as a basis for conduct or righteousness. But take this thought away, and what is left as a basis for conduct or righteousness? Is it the useful, or the pleasing, or the true, or the beautiful—or what? If there be no living God, on what do those principles rest? And to what law shall we appeal? Where is the standard? Shall it be in each one's sense of the useful, or the pleasing—or where? If there be no God, no law of 'righteousness, where is

Shall it be in each one's sense of the useful, or the pleasing—or where? If there be no God, no law of righteousness, where is the sense of obligation to rest? Where shall "ought" and "ought not" get their commanding power? And if there be no assurance of life beyond, what is to support mankind under the burdens they have to bear here? Where is the compensation for losses and sorrows? Why should not mankind end life wheneyer it has, or it is thought to have, more misery than satisfaction? These are the questions that the pleasing—or where? If there be no fold, no law of righteousness, where is the sense of obligation to rest? Where shall "ought" and "ought not" get their commanding power? And if there be no assurance of life beyond, what is to support mankind under the burdens they have to bear here? Where is the compensation for lossess and sorrows? Why should not mankind end life whenever it has, or it is thought to have, more misery than sate infaction? These are the questions that must confront our age as it holds up its hands and gladly rushes into the cold embrace of a godless and soulless material—must contront our age as it nodes up its hands and gladly rushes into the cold embrace of a godless and soulless materialism. The full effect of such a philosophy, of such a radical moving away from the old foundations, is not preceived, even in thought, at first, and the practical result upon the character of the people can not be estimated in the beginning of such a reign of unbelief. It takes time for the individual or the age to driftsway from the old ideas and principles. Those who are crowding their ideas to the front in our day are themselves the children of a Christian civilization. Harriet Martineau and Mill, and others of their lofty type, might live in a world of abstractions or negatives. But what will be the influence of such negatives upon the great masses of Europe and America—the masses who live largely in their appetites and passions, and are already only too restive under all ideas of law or restraint? These are the questions that confirm our age. And having thus stated some of the grave aspects of the religious thought of our time. I must here leave the subject for another Sabakh.

St. Louis, April 13.—The Missouri Stat Immigration Convention, arrangement for which have been in progress two or three months past, convened in the Mer cantile Library Hall about noon to-day and was called to order by Thos. W Fitch, Chairman of the St. Louis Executive Committee. Every county in the State is represented by from two to a dozen of the leading, most influential and enterprising citizens, and the convention enterprising citizens, and the convention promises to be the most important one of its kind ever held in this country.

Ex-Governor Thos. C. Fletcher was called to the chair as temporary President. The roll of the convention was then read, after which, on motion, the chairman appointed a committee of thirteen, one-from each Congressional District, to report the permanent officers and the order of business. The sonvention then took a recess to enable the Committee on Organization to prepare their report. prepare their report.

Durability of Timber.

As showing the durability of timber the fact is cited that the piles of a bridge built by Trajan were found, after having been driven some 1,600 years, to be petri fied four inches, the rest of the wood being in ordinary condition. The elm piles under the piers of London bridge have been in use more than 700 years, and are not yet materially decayed, and, beneath the foundation of Savoy Piace, London, oak, elm, beech and chestnut piles and planks were found in a state of perfect preservation, after having been there for 650 years. Again, while taking down the old walls of Tunbridge Castle, Kent, England, there was found, in the middle of a thick stone wall, a timber curb which had been enclosed for 700 years; and some timber of an old bridge was discovered while digging for the foundations of a house at Windsor which must have been placed there prior to the year 1896.
